Non-accessible elements and content:

- Some elements of the application's interface do not have labels for the Talkback and VoiceOver screen readers, which affects the intuitive use of the application
- Some text elements in the application's interface do not adapt or respond to changes in the dynamic font size settings, which can be modified in the system settings. As a result, some content may be cut off or overlap, which limits the readability of the interface content for users. This problem affects, among other things, button labels
- Some data input fields lack suggestions for correcting detected errors. This issue occurs in the input and text area components in the address fields
- The application's interface does not adapt its elements to the dynamic screen size settings, which can be modified in the system settings. As a result, some elements may be cut off or extend beyond the device's screen, which limits the readability of the interface content for users. This problem affects the entire application
- The application does not support the system-level interface change (light/dark mode). Users are not able to use this option within the application

Preparation of the accessibility statement
